Resident and visitors agree: City’s boom around Mobile

But it has nothing to do with steel, grain, shipyard construction or new college buildings.

This buzz is emanating from car stereos and train whistles, from downtown offices and construction sites. And more people want the buzz to continue.

“Makes me happy and keeps me up at night,” Patricia Walker, a Mobile N1 Road resident, said of loud car stereos and train whistles. “We don’t have the problems they hand out for noise pollution.”

The city has been trying to do something about all the noise pollution:

• Mobile police more than doubled the number of citations they handed out for noise violations from 2005 to 2006.

But for some residents, there is an unspoken feeling that the boom is something that never sleeps.

“Mobile is the city that never sleeps.”

JAGUARS INVITED TO NCAA!

Tongue-cutting case still mystery

By JULIAN DIXON

Tongue-cutting suspect in Citronelle slaying has been picked up by police.

Tongue-cutting case still mystery

USA PLAYERS CELEBRATE NEWS THAT THEY’RE HEADED TO BIRMINGHAM

Mobile police more than doubled the number of citations they handed out for noise violations from 2005 to 2006.

This buzz is emanating from car stereos and train whistles, from downtown offices and construction sites. And more people want the buzz to continue.

“Makes me happy and keeps me up at night,” Patricia Walker, a Mobile N1 Road resident, said of loud car stereos and train whistles. “We don’t have the problems they hand out for noise pollution.”

The city has been trying to do something about all the noise pollution:

• Mobile police more than doubled the number of citations they handed out for noise violations from 2005 to 2006.

But for some residents, there is an unspoken feeling that the boom is something that never sleeps.

“Mobile is the city that never sleeps.”

JAGUARS INVITED TO NCAA!

Tongue-cutting case still mystery

By JULIAN DIXON

Tongue-cutting suspect in Citronelle slaying has been picked up by police.

Tongue-cutting case still mystery

USA PLAYERS CELEBRATE NEWS THAT THEY’RE HEADED TO BIRMINGHAM